Annie's won over by sect's appeal

EURYTHMICS leader Annie Lennox, one of the more eccentric music-biz figures, has become a member of the Hare Krishna cult.

Following her marriage three weeks ago at Wood Green register office to a West German Krishna calling himself Radha Raman, Annie herself has become a firm devotee.

She carries a set of Krishna beads and has taken to chanting the sect's mantra 400 times a day.

In accordance with her new beliefs, she has become a strict vegetarian and has been visiting Krishna temples in America.

"It's natural that Annie should find a need for spiritual comfort to help her cope with the enormous pressure that accompanies such material success," says a spokesman at Bhaktivedanta Manor, the Watford country house bought for the Krishnas 11 years ago by George Harrison.

Annie is not the only pop star to have recently turned to the Krishnas.

Paul McCartney has been making devotees welcome at recording sessions at his London studios and has invited members down to his East Sussex farmhouse.

And British director Tony Palmer, who made films like Wagner, has begun negotiations with the organisation to make a religious epic based on their bible, the Bhagavad-Gita.

Mick's incredible missing millions

INCREDIBLE though it may seem, Mick Fleetwood, founder member of the vastly successful Fleetwood Mac, has filed for bankruptcy in the States.

His petition lists debts of around £2,000,000 and assets valued at just over £1,000,000. He owes two banks, a law firm, WEA Records and his ex-wife Jenny more than £500,000.

of personal idiosyncrasies... including a vast collection of Dinky toys.

GUITAR junkies will find The Guitar, a new book published by Columbus at £3.95 this month compulsive reading.

The book, colourfully illustrated, traces the instrument's origins in ancient history through classical music, jazz, the blues and country music through to present day rock and pop.
